The believers in the totalitarian state always argue that that form of government does the most to advance the interests of the "common man." They prate of production for use instead of production for profit, and point to the achievement of dictatorship in advancing the standard of living of the worker.

In the light of that, some figures concerning the Russian economy are of interest. In less than a year, the price of black bread, the staple item in the diet of the average Russian, has increased 240 per cent. Milk has gone up 220 per cent, sugar 196 per cent. butter 136 per cent and beef 114 per cent. The cost of clothing and all manufactured goods have also advanced tremendously, and are usually unobtainable at any price. But, in the same period, the wages of Russian workers have gone up only 25 per cent. The "fortunate" Russians are not burdened with a free, competitive economy such as that in the United States. They don't have to suffer along with such typically capitalistic monstrosities as great factories producing a growing flood of consumer goods—nor do they have chain stores and independent stores all competing with each other for consumer favor. In Russia everything is owned and controlled by the state, and the factories produce and the stores sell only what the masterminds at the top think fit and proper. The result, according to a U. S. Department of Labor survey, is the the living standards of American workers are about 1,000 per cent above those of their Russian counterparts.

those of their Russian counterparts.

Reep that in mind when you hear the virtues of Communism and other "isms" compared to the vices of the competitive free enterprise system of production and distribution.

of the competitive free enterprise system of production and distribution.

What Has Happened To The Dollar?

Labor's drive for ever-increasing wages, without compensatory increases in production, is a tragic example of economic futility.

A pictogram in the United Seates News vividly demonstrates what has happened to the American dollar. In terms of purchasing power, an income that had a net worth of $2500 in 1939 is worth only $1535 now. So it goes, up and down the income scale.

This is not, of course, entirely the result of increased wages. Many other factors, notably taxation and prodigal government spending, must bear their share of responsibility. But it is an obvious fact that the cost of labor represents a very large proportion of almost everything produced in this country.

In the past, we raised wages and lowered prices. We accomplished that because output per man increased along with pay. Since the war, the exact opposite has occurred. Most basic industries report that, while wages are much higher than before, production per man-hour is lower. The consequence of that can be expressed in a single word—inflation. The real interest of labor lies in job security—and in the purchasing power of the dollar. In self-defense, if for no other motive, labor must cooperate with management to get the goods out, to increase production, and to so control prices. Endless wage demands coupled with decreased production per man hour in orthe American economy. That is the hard truth of the matter.
